Fast fact:

Are shingles and shakes the same thing?

Usually, a shingle is sawn on both sides and is thinner at the butt than a shake. A shake is typically split on one or both sides. Shakes are generally thicker with more aggressive, rougher texture that is far less precise than that of a shingle.

Attractive transitions between styles, architectural elements and colors are the best way to ensure a uniform design on any home. CertainTeed offers a wide variety of wall and soffit transition options for you to create beautiful transitions, while providing protection from damaging moisture.
Explore Your Options

Trim provides a beautiful transition between two styles of siding. On long expanses of board & batten or soffit, a trim piece offers a way to add a signature outline or focal point. Also, consider a trim piece to transition from the wall up to the soffit.

Fast fact:

Band [Belly] Board:

Typically 5” – 6” reveal, can be used as a starter course for siding, a frieze board, a bold line separating levels of a house, or a transition piece in installations where siding alternates between horizontal, vertical and/or specialty profiles.

(Source: Vinyl Siding Institute)
Create a transition using a band board with foam insert, or create your transition using a wide-faced lineal.

A band board makes an excellent wall transition.

Lineals can transition lap siding to Cedar Impressions.
